Jordan Engineers Association

Jordan Engineers Association, JEA, was first incorporated in 1958 under the name "Jordan Engineers Society". The Association holds its current name since 1972. JEA is considered the largest professional association in Jordan. This is apparent not only by the large number of its current members (85,000), but also by the annual influx of its new members. JEA also incorporates a large number of Arab and foreign engineers practicing in Jordan. Every engineer or engineering office would not have the right to practice the profession without being a member in the association. The objectives and activities of JEA are not limited to organize and regulate the engineering profession, defend the interests and dignity of the members but also extended to organization of engineering conferences, workshops, training, social, economical and other activities. JEA includes more than 150 committees. www.jea.org.jo
